Lend A Helping Hand

A group of boys walking along a country road came upon a section of abandoned railroad track. Each one tried to walk the rails, and each one fell off.

Finally, two of the boys, after whispering to one another, bet the others that they could walk the length of the track without falling off.

Getting up on opposite rails, they extended a hand to balance each other—and they walked the entire section of track with no difficulty.

That is a very true principle of healthy living. We do things better, we produce more, we simply live happier, when we lend each other a helping hand.

Being a hermit or a lone wolf really does not work very well. It is teamwork and cooperation that count and accomplish great things.
