The Real Enemies

The Great Wall of China is one of what is historically known as The Seven Wonders of the World. It is also the only “man-made” object which can be seen from space.

First begun over 1,700 years ago and spanning more than 13,000 miles, it was constructed for defense. The purpose of the wall was national security—to keep out potential invaders coming from the north.

However, three times, early in its history, the wall was breached by the enemy. How? The wall was not broken down and neither was it scaled over. In each case, the enemy entered by bribing the gatekeepers.

The real enemies we face in life are not always on the outside. More often than not, the most important walls are the ones which we construct in our own minds and hearts.
