Smile At The Bulldog

The young girl was making faces at the bulldog. When her mother told her to stop, the girl replied: "Well, he started it."

The simple truth is that bulldogs look like bulldogs, so obviously there was no bad intent on the part of the dog.

But the story has another application.

Any person who goes through life with the belief that he or she needs to return every ugly face, or hurtful word, or disrespectful act is in for a never ending job. She or he is going to be a very unpleasant person for a very long time.

And what a meaningless, unproductive life that would be!

We have each been made a beautiful creation. Try smiling at the next bulldog you encounter.

Who knows, he just might smile back.
