The Big Hog

I have always tried to keep in mind an old story about a lady who lived in a small mid-western community. She kept a large hog on her property. However, this particular hog was so gigantic that it attracted visitors from all around.

One summer the woman became quite ill, so her sister had to come from far away to stay with her. After a few days, the sister became very annoyed with the steady stream of visitors and tourists coming to see the immense hog. Finally, in an attempt to put an end to it and give her sister some quiet, she put an ad in the local newspaper: "Mrs. Smith is very ill. Please do not come to see the big hog until she is better."

Communication is a very difficult, yet an extremely important matter. When you say what you say, be careful what you say. When you write what you write, be careful what you write. Once it is out there, it can never be undone.
